JULY 2010

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.

My brothers and sisters and I attended schools in Wapato. My brothers were popular in school because they played sports. I played baseball and basketball. At the beginning of one of the basketball games I played the center position but, couldn't reach the ball, I was too short, that was the only time I was assigned that position.

On December 7, 1941 Pearl Harbor, Hawaii was bombed by Japanese military forces. On December 8, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt declared War on Japan.

The bombing of Pearl Harbor really changed our life-style quickly. The government put a curfew on our activities and our travels, and our movements were curtailed. On January 14, 1942, President Roosevelt issued Presidential Proclamation Number 2537. It required that enemy aliens register. (This included the Issei, the first-generation Japanese living in the U.S, who were not allowed to own land or apply for American citizenship. On January 23, 1942, the Wapato Japanese Language School burned down under suspicious circumstances.)

On May 26, it was announced that Issei and Nisei (native-born U.S. citizen whose parents were Japanese immigrants in six central Washington counties would be evacuated by June 7th. All American-Japanese in the western half of Washington, Oregon and California, and the southern third of Arizona were removed from their homes and re-located in internment centers inland.

Our farm had been planted and was almost ready for harvest. My father, Jimmy and Joe arranged to have one of their employees take over the farm.

My oldest brother, “Choppie”, his wife, Mary, and small son, Bruce, also known as “Sonny”, were living in Portland, Oregon. They returned to Wapato to be evacuated with the family.

A letter was delivered to our family. It stated that we were to pack all our belongings that could be carried, up to 100 pounds per person, and be ready to be picked up the next day. The banks were closed and we were unable to withdraw money.

In May 1942 we were transported on a tightly-secured train, with all windows covered, so we couldn't see out. An armed soldier stood guard in our car. We were taken to the Portland Relocation Center – also known as the Portland Cow Palace, where horses and cows were previously housed.

Temporary housing was set up in the Cow Palace. We hung curtains to give our family some privacy. We lived there while the Heart Mountain, Wyoming Relocation Center was being readied for our group. We departed by train in June, again on a tightly-closed train. When we arrived in Heart Mountain we found that Los Angeles evacuees were already relocated there.

Summer is here, at least that is what the calendar tells us. The weather is a whole 'nother story. As we move into summer the weather will hopefully warm up and the draw to go outside is irresistible. When you venture out make sure you have sun screen on, for the ladies- the latest fashionable red hat, and for the men- this seasons winning baseball team hat, and have a water bottle with you. Keeping your skin protected and yourself well hydrated is the best thing you can do to prevent dehydration and over exposure. You don't have to drink water, for those of you who don't like water. You can carry a low in sugar juice, ice tea, or lemonade for a couple of examples. It is recommended you stay away from sodas and coffee when in the sun because they tend to dehydrate you. But I do recommend getting outside as often as you can when the big, bright, round ball known as the sun, is out because the Vitamin D is essential to your body and mind. The nitty gritty is it makes you feel better and tends to give you a little more energy by warding off fatigue.

Enjoy the coming sun.
